Organization and the Re
President's Annual Mess

The second session of the forum will begin at noon to-day.

After prayer the roll will be called, and the new members of the board will be sworn in. They are: Mr. Heard, successor of Mr. Cheney, successor of Mr. Pike, of New Hampshire, and Mr. Pollock, as representative of the ninth congressional district.

Each house will appoint a committee to perform the other of its readiness business. Upon the completion of the organization a joint committee will be appointed.

The calendar contains 260 bills, from which number a major will make its selections for the week. There is a prospect of an early the measure, being a conference at the option of the conference business. It is not likely, however, that consideration would be pressed following week.

It is hardly probable that any many of the representatives to introduce resolutions which have accumulated during the recess. A proposal may also be presented to the conferees on the fortification act, which failed of enactment last year. In view of the total disagreement in which that act was confederated, should the conferees of commerce bill reach an agreement, should the House action be taken on the measure.

The President's message is certainly an impressive one. It is a document containing only one-tenth or one-third less than his first message. It was written by the President's staff. It will be found to attract considerable attention, as has the Pacific railroad matters.
